CAMBRIDGE.

9 September, 1915 .

Dear Dr. Dixon Martin,

If my name will carry any weight at all certainly use it as a reference. I know you and your professional qualifications well enough to realise that your retirement from medicine was a great loss to us and that your return would be of very great advantage to the study and practice of our art and, shall I say, science. Curiously enough I was speaking of you on Tuesday when I was lunching with Mrs. H.J. Tennant who, if you remember, was at your table on the occasion of that memorable dinner, now 18 years ago. I hope that Mr. Martin is well and that he will come through this terrible war sound alike in body and mind. We have our work set but I think we shall manage to come out on the right side. It would be a terrible thing for Europe and the world if we ^{are} do not ~~do so~~ ^{to do so}.

With kind regards,

I am, yours faithfully,

G. S. Martin Woodhead
